FISH STREET
CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

1769-1982

Historical Background:

In 1769 dissenters from Dagger Lane Independent Chapel built a place of worship in Barker's Court on Blanket Row. In 1782 land in Fish Street was purchased and a new meeting house was erected. Sheahan says that on 11th November 1837 the first marriage in Hull under the new Marriage Act was solemnised there.

By the early nineteenth century the population in Hull was increasing rapidly and the town was expanding. From well established congregations like that in Fish Street emerged other non-conformist churches, such as Nile Street (1827), Cogan Street (1833) and Albion Street (1842). It has even been said that Fish Street Congregational Church was one of the chief centres of nonconformist life in the whole country. The church in Fish Street closed in 1898 and moved to Princes Avenue (Fish Street Memorial Church) where it remained until its eventual closure in 1982.

Two noteworthy ministers at Fish Street were George Lambert 1769-1816 and Thomas Stratten 1832-1854. Stratten was particularly noted for opening the doors of membership more widely to the young and for improving the music of the church.

The first church organ was built in 1853 and the second was acquired in 1875, renovated and enlarged in 1895 and removed to the memorial church in 1900. The third organ was built in 1926 and was, at the time, believed to be one of the best in its class in the country. All three organs were designed and built by Forster and Andrews, Organ Builders of Hull.

The Sunday School was established around 1813 and really began to flourish by 1830 after tickets were introduced for regular attendance, good behaviour and Scripture.

L DCFS/5/5	Fish Street Day Schools In 1865 a decision was taken by members of the congregation to erect a public elementary school in connection with the church. Their objective was to provide secular education for the scholars attending the Sunday School. The school was formally opened in 1871. Most of the money was raised by voluntary contributions from members of the church. The remainder was provided by the secretary of State for the Home Department by way of a grant. They were managed by people appointed by the church until Hull School Board took on the lease. The schools were eventually closed in Feb 1899. A contract for the sale of the schools was entered into with Holder Brothers Ltd of Hull subject to the consent of the charity commissioners and the Home Secretary.
