Biographical Background: Winifred Holtby was born on 23 June 1898 to a prosperous farming family in Rudston, East Yorkshire. Holtby was initially educated at home by a governess and later at Queen Margaret's School in Scarborough. She won a scholarship to read Modern History at Somerville College, Oxford University but chose to postpone her studies opting instead to join the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps in 1918. In 1919 Holtby returned to her studies at the University of Oxford and met Vera Brittain, beginning their life-long friendship. After graduating Holtby and Brittain moved to London in the hope of establishing themselves as writers.

Holtby, like Brittain was an ardent feminist, socialist and pacifist and she initially gained fame through her journalism and later as an author. As well as her journalism, Holtby wrote 14 books, including six novels; two volumes of short stories; the first critical study of Virginia Woolf (1932); and a feminist survey called Women and a Changing Civilization (1934). Holtby is of course best remembered for her novel South Riding, which was edited by Vera Brittain and published posthumously in 1936.

In 1931 Holtby had been diagnosed as having Bright's disease and she later died on 29 September 1935. She was buried at All Saints Church in Rudston.

Custodial history: Upon Winifred Holtby's death her archive was left to the people of Hull. It was deposited with the Local Studies Library and is now housed at the Hull History Centre. The majority of the items were deposited by Shirley Williams M.P., whereas L WH/1/1.26 were deposited in 2017.

Description: In addition to her published works and biographies, Hull Local Studies Library houses a collection of thousands of items which form the largest collection of original material on Winifred Holtby in public ownership in the world. A substantial collection, reflecting her personal life and her involvement in politics, feminism and South African civil rights, as well as showing the path of her literary and journalistic career.

The papers are as varied as that which they illustrate, and include letters, manuscripts, newscuttings, video and audio recordings, photographs, advertising material, books, paintings and even a tablecloth.
