

C DDHC Deeds relating to properties in Hull 1736-1977

Accession numbers: 16/10 and 16/34

Historical Background: The Ropery, later renamed Humber Street, led off the Hull's High Street. It was the most southern street adjoining the River Humber until later streets were added after the town docks had been built and land reclaimed as a consequence. Blackfriargate was originally the site of an Augustinian Friary, whose members wore black habits. Queen Street, also known as Billingsgate, was one of the streets laid out during the improvements of the late 18th century. It was named after Queen Charlotte, wife of King George II. These 3 streets are all part of what is known as the Fruit Market area of the city. When the former Hull garrison or citadel was demolished, Tower Street was one of the sites that emerged as a result of those developments.

The Urban Regeneration Agency, which was part of English Partnerships, the national regeneration agency for England, was at one stage involved in the development of Hull's Fruit Market area and Boom. In 2008 these organisations became part of the newly created Homes and Community Agency.
