

C TCE Records of the Hull City Council Technical Instruction 1836-1975 and Education Committees

Historical Background: The Technical Instruction Act, 1889, allowed local authorities to levy rates in order to develop technical or manual education in their area. This would be distinct from the elementary education provided by the school boards, which had been established in 1870 and were separate bodies from the local council. In addition, in 1890 under the Local Taxation (Custom and Excise) Act, authorities could divert money raised from taxing publicans for the purposes of providing technical instruction. As a consequence, Hull Town Council set up the Technical Instruction Committee in December 1890. The committee was to consider and report to the Council as to the application of the said Acts. All communication forwarded to the Council with respect to this subject would be referred to this committee. It was under such provision, that the city set up its museum and art gallery.

The Technical Instruction Committee was terminated from November 1903 when it became the Education Committee, as the school boards had been abolished and the city council had taken over responsibility for elementary education. At this time, the committee's powers and provisions remained largely the same, except for one addition, which was the duty 'to carry out the Education Acts 1870 to 1902 within the area of the City Council'. The functions of the committee with regard to the museum and art gallery were transferred to the Property Committee at the same time.

Provisions under various other acts would be added over the years including; the Education (Provision of Meals) Act, 1906; the Education (Administrative Provisions) Act, 1907; the boarding out of Poor Law Children and the administration and control of the Children's Institutions transferred by the Local Government Act, 1929, (subject to the confirmation of the proceedings of the Health and Public Assistance Committee); the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933 (except Section 12); the powers and duties under the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913-1938; the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1935, and the Shops Acts, 1934, so far as they relate to the employment of children and young persons, and the 1944 Education Act. In 1936 the City Council took over the Castle Howard Farm School from the Castle Howard Reformatory Society, with the Education Committee responsible for it until transferred to the Children's Committee in July 1948.

By 1952, the committee was to carry out the powers and duties of the Council as the Local Education Authority for the City under:-

1. the Education Acts, subject to the provisions of the arrangements for the establishment of the Education Committee made by the Council and approved by the Minister of Education, and to such instructions to the Committee as the Council may from time to time adopt.
2. the Children and Young Persons Acts.
3. the Employment and Training Act, 1948, although this would later be amended to include 'in accordance with the Scheme approved by the Minister of Labour' from 1954/55.

In addition, in 1969/1970 were added the functions of the Council acting as the Custodian Trustees of the Hull Young People's Christian and Literary Institute.

Like many other more modern committees, by the 1970s, the power, duties and responsibilities of the Education Committee were more clearly defined.

However, local government reform meant that in 1974, the education function was removed from Hull City Council and passed to that of the newly created Humberside County Council. Further changes to local government in 1994 resulted in the abolition of Humberside in 1996 and the return of education to the new Hull City Council, a unitary authority and its Education Committee. This new, reformed committee operated from 1995 until 1999 when the City Council committee system was reorganised completely, with a leader and cabinet style executive arrangement.
