Parliamentary matters in which the Hull
Municipal Corporation had an interest

1839-1981

Historical Background: Around 1700 the unreformed Hull Corporation had taken an interest in the Derwent (Derby) Navigation Bill (see reference C BRS/40). But it was not until after the enactment of the first Dock Act in 1774, that parliamentary business became a regular aspect of corporation work. Successive dock extension schemes in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries prepared the way for massive expansion in parliamentary work created by the appearance of the railway in the second quarter of the century. Other public utilities, gas, water, electricity, tramways etc. also needed parliamentary powers to develop and improve their services and their applications added to the spate of legislation coming before the corporation. Most of these were classed as Private Bills or Acts, because they applied to specific individuals, groups or corporate bodies and not the nation as a whole. In addition, some of these were also identified as Local Acts. These Local Acts were brought forward by these corporate bodies for such projects. A few bills generally dealing with the powers, duties and functions of local authorities were also considered.

The corporation's interests in these bills varied. In some cases it was deeply involved in promoting a cause thought beneficial to the town or in opposing apparently harmful proposals. In others, it was more specifically concerned with the impact of proposals on corporate property or interests. On its own initiative or at the request of a local interests elsewhere it took steps to oppose the admission of a principal which might subsequently be applied to Hull on the strength of the precedent. It is clear that many other bills were simply acquired and investigated as a precaution lest they include matter detrimental to Hull's corporate interest. This collection deals with files of papers relating to specific bills that affected the town and later city. These can vary in size, from a single copy of a bill to several files containing copies of the bill in all its stages, copies of petitions against it, briefs for counsels, proofs of evidence given at hearings and correspondence with agents, opponents etc.

This process of considering the impact of various bills on the town was at its zenith between the mid nineteenth and early twentieth century. However by the mid-twentieth century with parliamentary procedures changing, such as the introduction of Statutory Instruments and with fewer Local Acts being presented, there was less need for such extensive parliamentary work.

Custodial history: Some records were already held by the Hull City Archives on its creation in 1968 while additional records were transferred by the Town Clerk's and Chief Executive's Department in 1993. Records not relating to the Hull area, which did not interest the Corporation, or duplicates of records held elsewhere, have been de-accessioned in line with the Hull City Archives appraisal policy.

Description: Parliamentary bills and acts; Parliamentary orders; draft, revised and amended clauses; petitions; evidence statements; briefs; reports; statistics; notices; resolutions and minutes of meetings; accounts and other financial information; plans and maps; some photographs; correspondence and other related papers.

Related material: Closely associated with this material are the records of the Parliamentary Committee of the council (reference C TCD). These consist of minutes (see reference C TCM), which include reports of the town clerk and other officers on individual bills and committee papers which include working papers and documents relating to several bills promoted in a single session.

Other public bodies in the area also took an interest in legislation, and records relating to these can be found within those of the Hull Board of Health (C BHH), Newington Board of Health (C BHN) and the Humber Conservancy (C DPD/1) and the Aire and Calder Navigation (C DPD/2). Promoters of bills were obliged to deposit plans, books of reference and notices with the Clerk of the Peace and clerks to the local authority whose areas were affected by their proposals. These are to be found within the records of the Quarter Sessions, (C CQP), the Board of Health (C BHH) and the Hull Corporation (C TRD). Copies of many bills and acts may also be found within C SRL/Acts, see the index cards in the searchroom for more details.

The Parliamentary Archives holds the minutes relating to debates in both the House of Lords and the House of Commons and the various select committees assembled to review the proposed legislation.
